Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: ... or convulsions are then the usual accompaniment of the teething period, and these unnatural attacks are either the result of worms, or of nervous disorder, caused by irritation of the nerves of the intestines during the passage of the undigested food. Sensible, natural feeding is the surest and safest preventive against teething troubles, as it is against every one of the baby's ailments. "In a word, wherever artificial feeding becomes a necessity, turn a deaf ear to those who would advise the use of any other food but milk. Milk is Nature's model food for infants: it must be made the chief mainstay for the first two years of their life, if they are to live and thrive, and grow up into healthy childhood." Lesson XXVIII Hints For Young Nurses When the time for the next meeting at the Institute came round, every one was very much surprised to see Miss Brown at the lecturer's table instead of the doctor. "I am taking the doctor's place this evening," she explained, "because I want to give my young nurses here several useful hints for their future guidance in managing baby, should they at any time be left in charge of the dear little thing; and perhaps I cannot make a better commencement than by following up our good friend's advice, as regards baby's food, with a few words about the feeding-bottle, for the bottle certainly requires as much careful management as the food itself. "Now after what the doctor has already said as to the necessity of perfect cleanliness in everything connected with baby's food and its preparation, you will not be surprised if I tell you that, a dirty feedingbottle is one of the most dangerous of the many evils, which beset the hand-fed infant. "Nevertheless, a dirty bottle is no uncommon thing. In...
